PEGGING, vbl. sb. Obsol. Lei. Hrt. Hmp. The operation of 'settering' (q.v.).

Lei.[1] The custom of 'pegging' calves or yearlings for the 'black leg' is now rapidly dying out. It was done by punching or burning a hole through the ear or the dewlap, putting a twist of horsehair through it, like a seton, and securing it with pegs at each end. Hrt. Putting a bit of Hellebore root in the grisly part of the ear which is called pegging, ELLIS Experiments (1750) 62. Hmp. Longman's Mag. (Sept. 1899) 467.

PEGGINGS, sb. pl. Obs. Hrt. Inferior kernels of wheat; see below.

What we call peggings, being composed of those corals that were swept off the heap of wheat after throwing, ELLIS Mod. Husb. (1750) VI. iii. 60; Peggings . . . being what comes from the under line or blighted, or other wheat ears, most of which contain in them very thin little kernels, that will easily part from their chaff, ib. Cy. Hswf. (1750) 2.

PEGGIN'-TOP, sb. Irel. Dur. [pe·gin-top.] A peg-top.

Don. The poor boy's comin' roun' as fast as a peggin'-top. He'll be himself again in another minit or two, Cent. Mag. (Oct. 1899) 958. e.Dur.[1]

A dish was then passed round, in which each deposited a coin, the amount collected being given to the bride. The term 'penny-wedding' appears to have arisen from this custom. Owing to the large number of guests entertained... it was usual for the neighbours to assist in providing for them. Landowners gave beef, mutton, and venison; farmers, poultry and dairy produce; and the minister and the schoolmaster lent cooking utensils, Andrews *Ch. PENNY-HEDGE, sb. Yks. [pe·ni-ɛdʒ.] A fence or hedge set up annually on the eastern shore of Whitby harbour, at the Feast of the Ascension; see below.

n.Yks. The planting of the horngarth, or 'pennyhedge,' performed at Whitby on Wednesday, is one of the most curious, in its origin, of the several ancient customs which survive in England. According to a legend dating from 1315 'the lords of Sneaton and Ugglebarnby, with others, whilst hunting the boar, did mortally injure an hermit, who dared to protect the quarry,' and as penance for the outrage it was decreed that thenceforth the local lord and his successors should plant a certain number of stakes in the tideway. The 'penance' has been performed annually ever since, Dy. Mail (May 25, 1900); The so-called Penny-hedge observance; I mean the making of fences or hedges by aid of stakes and wattle-work, ATKINSON Whitby (1894) 234; n.Yks.[2] A hedge of wicker work set up annually... by the holders of certain lands who carry out, in semblance, the injunction laid down in the 'Pennyhedge Legend.'.. 10. To uproot turnips with a hand instrument. Rut. (J.P.K.) Hence Picker, sb. an instrument used for picking turnips.

Nhb.[1] It is called a 'tormit' picker, or picker simply. It is usually made from a broad-bladed sickle, the back rib of which is forged and drawn over in hook form to a fine point. The pointed hook is used for 'ruttin up' the turnips, whilst the blade is used for 'shawin' the tops, when the turnips require to be gathered and stored. For pulling turnips only, a two-pronged curved-in picker is used. A third form of picker is used for lifting out the shells of turnips which have been eaten hollow below the surface by sheep; it has a point at nearly a right angle from the shank, and is called a 'dyeuk-neb' (duck-bill) picker. n.Yks. (I.W.)

11. To give a light stroke with any pointed instrument; to indent; to hew and dress stone.

Sc. 'To pik or pick a millstane,' to indent it slightly (JAM.). Sh.I. Shü's as slight noo as a sharpin'-stane for want o' bein' pickid, Sh. News (Dec. 11, 1897). Bnff.[1]

7. Weaving term: to throw or push the shuttle across the loom; also with over; see below.

w.Yks. One of the weaver's hands 'picked' the shuttle, the other sent the weft home with the 'going part,' and was termed 'striking,' so that when the warp was good, he had nought to do 'but pick an' strike.' Before the flying shuttle was invented for broad looms, a man was stationed at each end of the loom, and each pushed or picked the shuttle across the warp to his fellow. It is prob. about 100 to 120 years since this way of weaving ceased in this locality [Calverley] (W.T.); 'To pick double,' when the shuttle is driven across the loom and back, or twice across (S.A.B.); (R.H.R.); w.Yks.[3] 'To pick a pick,' to throw the shuttle once across. Lan. He ne'er picked ower i' his loife, Gaskell M. Barton (1848) iv.

PICKIE, sb.[1] Sc. Irel. The game of 'hop-scotch' or 'beds'; also in pl. Cf. pick, v.[3] 10.

Lth. The 'pickies' (or the 'beds,' or the 'Pall-all') played with a flat stone on the pavement, Strathesk More Bits (ed. 1885) 33. Ker. One player commences first by winning the toss. The pick (a small flat stone) is pitched into No. 1 bed. It is then moved out of this first place, backward across the front line, and not otherwise, by touching or forcing it with one foot, the other foot being kept up; that is, the player must hop and use the foot on the ground to strike the 'pick.' No line must be touched. If this happens, or if the pick, when being driven towards the pitching line, gets away otherwise than across the front line, the player is 'out,' and the next boy goes in. All the beds are done likewise, and all must be then done in a reverse way, beginning with No. 10. The first player who completes the game wins, Gomme Games (1898) II. 451.

Cor.[3] In the game of 'pins' one player holds a pin in the closed hand, palm upwards; another places a second pin along the tips of the first one's fingers and guesses heads or tails—that is, that both heads will be one side. If on opening the hand the heads are opposite, they cry 'piddlymins,' and the result is considered unlucky for the guesser.

PIDGEL, PIDIE, see Pedgel, Piedy.

PIE, sb.[1] and v.[1] Var. dial. uses in Sc. and Eng. Also written pye Der. Glo. Ess. Dev. Cor.[2]; and in form poi w.Yks.[2] Lei.[1] [pai, Midl. poi.] 1. sb. In comb. (1) Pie-gathering, see below; (2) -kiln, a kiln for burning lime in; (3) -lid, a pie-crust; (4) -peel, a pole with a flat piece of wood at the end of it, used for putting in or taking out loaves, pies, &c. from an oven.

(1) Cum.[4] It was formerly a custom in some districts at Christmas time for the boys to collect pies, cakes or money, and afterwards to divide the collection between them. (2) Der. Uses a great deal of lime and burns it in a pye-kiln, MARSHALL Review (1814) IV. 137. (3) e.Lan.[1] (4) s.Chs.[1] We have two varieties of 'peels,' viz. bread-peels and pie-peels (s.v. Peel).

2. Phr. (1) pie and roast, see below; (2) as noist as pie, said of anything convenient, comfortable, appropriate, or toothsome; (3) as right as pie, quite right; (4) father of the pie, (a) a lover of delicacies and good living; (b) the chairman of a convivial meeting; (5) in the pie, in a plot, confederacy, &c.; (6) like pie, very warm; (7) to make a pie, to combine in order to make money; (8) to put in the pie, a process resorted to in choosing sides in a game, &c.; see below.

(7) n.Cy. (HALL.), ne.Lan.[1] (8) Nhb.[1] Also called 'odd man' and 'last man out.' One of the players lends his cap, and each of the others stands round with one finger in the pie. One of them then recites a rhyme, touching the fingers in succession as each word is repeated. He whose finger is touched at the last word stands aside. The process is continued until one only is left in, and he, being last man, is 'hit.' The following is the formula which is usually repeated on the occasion: 'Onery, twoery, tackery, tivven, Alaboo, clackaboo, tenor iliven, Peam, pam, musky Tom, Tweedle-um, twaddle-um, twenty-one.'

3. Fig. A mess, scrape; a state of difficulty or embarrassment.

Lnk. 'Eh, me, we're in a fine pie noo!' forebodingly said Mattie, MURDOCH Readings (1895) II. 109. Lakel.[2]

n.Lin.[1] What an' a piement them bairns hes maade all oher this cleän floor.

4. A prize or find; see below.

Nhb.[1] Also used when something is found to turn the laugh against an antagonist. 'It wis grand pie tiv us.'

5. Blocks of tin adulterated by lumps of iron being enclosed in the centre. Cor.[2] 6. A heap of root-crops, esp. potatoes, stored in the open fields during winter. Cf. clamp, sb.[1] 5.

Bwk. A pit or pie is a conical heap of potatoes, about four feet diameter at bottom, built up to a point as high as they will admit of, and resting upon the dry bare ground. The heap is carefully covered over by a layer of straw; a trench is then dug all round and the earth thrown over the straw and well beaten down by a spade. The apex or summit of the heap is generally secured from rain by a broad grassy sod, Agric. Surv. 293 (Jam., s.v. Pit). n.Yks.[1] A heap of thirty or forty bushels is made of a low or blunt conical form; this is then covered with straw to the thickness of four or five inches, and over the straw earth, dug from the surface surrounding the pie, is regularly laid and afterwards smoothed over with the spade, so as to form an even-sided cone of three, or three feet and a half high, with a base of nine or ten feet; n.Yks.[4] ne.Yks.[1] T'bull loup'd reet inti Nanny taatie-pie. e.Yks. He asked him to come and empty the 'pie,' and wheel all the potatoes into an outhouse, Nicholson Flk-Lore (1890) 120; e.Yks.[1], w.Yks. (J.W.), Not.[1], s.Not. (J.P.K.) Lin. He stole a lot o' taties out o' pie, an' hugged 'em awaay i' a poke (J.T.F.). n.Lin.[1] The pyes [preserving pits] being ready 6 inches deep, and 6 feet wide, the carts take them [the potatoes] home, Young Agric. (1799) 143. sw.Lin.[1], e.An.[1] Suf. Morton Cyclo. Agric. (1863); Suf.[1]

7. A manure-heap or pit; a stack of dung.

Wor. 'In making silage by the pie-system an oblong excavation would be made of much greater dimensions than for potatoes. . . After the pit had been filled up with the green crop,' the loads of green crop would be piled up until such a height is attained that the horses can no longer pull the loads up one side or other of the mound. 'This is exactly the process followed so far in making dung pies, only there is seldom any excavation of a pit for them.' The silage pie is finished by placing a little straw on the crown, covering this with earth, and 'after the earth from the pit has been clamped round, a trench is dug out for more earth to be clamped up, and this trench serves to keep the pie perfectly dry at its foundation,' Evesham Jrn. (Oct. 10, 1896). w.Cy. The land would be the better for this year's lying fallow, and the very 'trumpery' it brought forth, could be burned to fill the pies, Bayly J. Merle (1890) xxxix.

8. Obs. A receptacle for rape-seed.

Yks. (Hall.) e.Yks. The [rape]-seed is cured (i.e. takes the heat which is incident to all recent vegetables) in the chaff or pods (provincially 'pulls') either on a barn-floor, a granary, &c., or in pies built in the field for this purpose with plaited straw, Marshall Rur. Econ. (1788) II. 40.

9. A wagon. Also in comp. Pie-wagon, see below.

n.Yks. While others are equally busy in putting the unwinnowed seed into bags, and carrying it to the pie or waggon, Tuke Agric. (1800) 137. w.Yks. Pie-wagon, a railway wagon loaded with many small consignments of goods for var. stations, as distinct from a wagon fully loaded for one station (B.K.).

10. v. To store root-crops, esp. potatoes, in the open fields during winter. Also with down or up.

n.Yks.[14] ne.Yks.[1] Wa a'e gotten t'biggest part o' wer tonnops pied. e.Yks. In October the plants [mangel wurtzel] should be drawn up, and either put into a building to protect them from severe frost, or otherwise 'pied,' that is, laid upon the ground in a dry place, on a heap about five feet wide and three feet in height, formed like the roof of a house, and covered with straw; a trench is dug round, and the soil neatly thrown over the straw, and beat down with the spade. Potatoes and carrots are also 'pied,' Farm Reports, Scoreby (1832) 12; e.Yks.[1], w.Yks. (J.W.) s.Not. A've pied all my taters up (J.P.K.). n.Lin.[1] sw.Lin.[1] A heap of potatoes or other roots placed in a hole, . . covered down with straw and earth against the winter, . . are said to be 'pied down' or to be 'in pie.' 'Better buy a ton at once and pie them down.' Ess. They are all holed or pyed, Marshall Review (1817) V. 179.

Hence Pillar-working, prp. driving a passage through the 'pillars.'

Nhb.[1] In 'broken' or pillar working a passage is driven through the pillars, which are then said to be 'jenkined.' What is then left of the pillars are called 'stooks,' and when these are taken away the roof collapses on the worked out 'waste.' Nhb., Dur. Greenwell ib.

2. Salt-mining term: a mass of rock salt left in excavating a mine extending from floor to ceiling, in order to support the overlying strata. Chs.[1] 3. One of the transverse pieces which support the 'bed' or a wagon or carriage over the axles. Also in comp. Pillar-piece.

Wil.[1] (s.v. Waggon). w.Som.[1] The cross timber attached to and supporting the bottom of the fore-part of the body. It bears upon the poll-piece [pül·ur pees], and turns upon it when the wheels are 'locked.' The main-pin passes through both. In a timber-carriage or railway timber-truck the pillar-piece is that on which the log actually rests, and is made to turn on its centre.

4. A large thick pile of white clouds. Sus.[1] 5. v. To erect artificial supports for the roof of a mine. Nhb.[1] Nhb., Dur. Greenwell Coal Tr. Gl. (1849).

The mystic well ... is one of those supposed to be endowed with the power of granting the desires of such persons as approach them in a believing mood. These persons must, while fervently wishing for some boon, drop a crooked pin into the water, to propitiate the genius of the fountain, LILBURN Borderer (1896) 173; Near to Wooler, there is a spring of water locally known as Pin Well. The country maids in passing this spring, drop a crooked pin into the water... The superstition consists in a belief that the well is under the charge of a fairy, and that it is necessary to propitiate the little lady by a present of some sort; hence the pin as most convenient. N. & Q. (1852) 1st S. vi. 28; Nhb.[1] A curious custom was long observed in connection with a well at the foot of Horsedean, near Wooler. On May-day a procession was formed, and marched from the town (Wooler) to this spot, where a halt was called, and each of the processionists dropped a crooked pin into it, at the same time 'wishing a wish.' PINCH, sb.[2] and v.[2] n.Cy. Yks. [pinʃ.] 1. sb. A game which consists in pitching halfpennies at a mark; see below.

n.Cy. (Hall.) w.Yks. Banks Wkfld. Wds. (1865); w.Yks.[1] The game of pitch-halfpenny or pitch and hustle. It is played by two or more antagonists, who pitch or cast a halfpenny each, at a mark, which in Craven is called a motto, placed at a certain distance from what is called the bye. The owner of the half-penny, which falls nearest the motto, claims the privilege to hustle first. The next nearest halfpenny entitles its owner to the second claim, and so on in rotation. When they hustle, all the half-pence that are pitched at the mark are thrown into a hat held by the player, who claims the first chance. After shaking them together, he hits the crown of the hat a smart blow with his fist, which causes them to jerk out, and as many as lie with the impression of the head upwards belong to him. The remainder is then put into the hat a second time, and the second claimant performs the same kind of operation, and so on in succession, till all the halfpence fall with the heads upwards, gen. called a man, as the opposite side is called a woman. If it so happen, that after all of them have hustled there remain some of the half-pence, that have not fallen with the heads uppermost, the first player then hustles again, and the others in succession, until they do come so; w.Yks.[2] Some colliers were lately fined £1 each and costs for playing at pinch on Sunday; w.Yks.[4]; w.Yks.[5] (s.v. 2. A marl-pit. Chs.[3] 3. An excavation in the soil; see below.

Brks.[1] These are extremely common in fields in the 'Hill Country' of Berkshire. They owe their origin to the practice of sinking wells or making excavations in order to obtain chalk as a 'top-dressing' for the soil; the subsequent filling in caused pits to be formed.

4. A colliery; also the well sunk from the surface to the coal-seams.

Sc. A dungeon as deep as a Newcastle pit, VEDDER Poems (1842) 3. Nhb.[1] Nhb., Dur. A circular, square, or oblong vertical sinking from the surface. The term 'shaft,' which is often used as synonymous, may either be a pit or only a portion of one, severed off by a vertical or main brattice; a pit may thus be divided into two or more shafts, GREENWELL Coal Tr. Gl. (1849). e.Dur.[1], Yks. (J.W.)

Hence Pittie, sb. a collier. e.Dur.[1]

5. A saw-pit; see below.

w.Som.[1] Not by any means necessarily an excavation. Sawyers very often speak of putting up a pit, that is, of erecting a framework on posts or other supports above ground, on which to place the 'piece' to be sawn.

Dev. A . . . cuss'd me into the pit for interruptin' uv'n, NORWAY Parson Peter (1900) 196; Dev.[4] Many nits, many pits [if there is much hedge-fruit, there will be many graves] (s.v. Nit). nw.Dev.[1]

9. Obs. A trench dividing lands.

e.Yks. Our chiefe care is to save . . . our fresh pitts, BEST Rur. Econ. (1641) 118.

10. A mark or spot left by any cause, as rain upon silk.

n.Yks.[1] w.Yks.[5] When milk splashes broad-cloth, it may be rubbed dry, but the 'pits' still remain.

11. The deep water of a bay.

Cor. Going down to the porth, we embark in the boat that carries the 'stop-net,' and row out to the sean-boat at her moorings in 'the pit,' Good Wds. (1896) 14; (M.A.C.)

12. A heap, esp. a conical heap of potatoes or mangolds covered with earth; the mound in which potatoes are thus stored. Cf. potato-pit, s.v. Potato, II. 1 (22).

Sc. The potato fields, with only heaps of sodden shaws, and the long newly-filled pits to tell of what had been, SWAN Gates of Eden (ed. 1895) xv. Cai.[1] Bwk. A pit... is a conical heap of potatoes, about four feet diameter at bottom, built up to a point, as high as they will admit of, and resting upon the dry bare ground. The heap is carefully covered by a layer of straw; a trench is then dug all round, and the earth thrown over the straw, and well beaten down by the spade. The apex . . . is generally secured from rain by a broad grassy sod. A shallow hollow, about a foot deep, is generally dug in the place where the potatoes are to be laid; and, from this circumstance, the name has been extended to the heap itself, Agric. Surv. 293 (JAM.). Dmf. QUINN Heather (1863) 228. Ir. (A.S.-P.) Oxf. I shall order a sack of potatoes when it's time for them to be taken out of the pit (G.O.). Wil. The mode of preserving potatoes during winter . . . being in general left in the fields, covered up in long narrow ridges of earth (provincially 'pits'), with an intermediate covering of dry straw, DAVIS *Gen. speech. Glo.[1] 3. Various specific kinds of earthenware vessels; see below.

n.Lin.[1] An earthen vessel with an ear and a lip to pour from; to be distinguished from a jug. sw.Lin.[1] Always used for a small jug, such as a milk jug. The term Jug is applied to large stone-ware jars. Shr.[1] Earthenware vessels of the finer kinds, common china included. w.Som.[1] A deep vase-shaped jug, having one handle at the top on one side. The pitcher is always made of coarse brown earthenware (cloam). If of finer ware, or china, it is a jug.

4. pl. Bits of broken crockery used as playthings by children. Shr.[1] 5. v. To demand money of one who begins a courtship; see below.

n.Yks. When a young man paid his addresses to a young woman who did not reside in the same village as himself, it was the custom 40 or 50 years ago to 'pitcher' him, i.e. the young men residing in the same village as the woman would agree that he should be 'pitcherd.' Consequently, when they knew the man was with the woman, several would go and take a pitcher into which he was expected to drop some money for drink. If he submitted to be thus 'pitcherd' he was allowed to come quietly; if not he was subject to constant annoyance (W.H.). w.Yks. Two young fellows, some years since, had to pay £4 for 'pitchering' a young man who came from Huddersfield to Almondbury Bank courting... W. M. was 'pitchered' at Smithy-place, near Honley; he was, in fact, thrown into a sump-hole, where he was almost suffocated, Leeds Merc. Suppl. (Mar. 7, 1896); w.Yks.[1] One of the young inmates of the family takes a small pitcher and half fills it with water; he then goes, attended by his companions, and, presenting it to the lover, demands a present in money. If he is disposed to give anything, he drops his contribution into the pitcher, and they retire without further molestation. He is thus made a free-man and can quietly pay his visits in future, without being subject to any similar exaction. But if, after repeated demands, the lover refuse to pay his contribution, he is either saluted with the contents of the pitcher, or a general row ensues, in which the water is spilled and the pitcher is broken; w.Yks.[3]

Hence (1) Pitchering, vbl. sb. the custom of demanding money from a man who is going courting; (2) Pitchering-brass, sb., (3) Pitcherings, sb. pl. the money given by the man who is 'pitchered.'

(1) n.Yks. N. & Q. (1877) 5th S. vii. 336. w.Yks. Leeds Merc. Suppl. (Nov. 8, 1884); w.Yks.[1] (2) w.Yks. Leeds Merc. Suppl. (Mar. 7, 1897). (3) w.Yks.[5] When any young men meet with an acquaintance in company with his sweetheart, they put in their claim for 'pitcherings,' or for a sum of money, to be given by the male, which is spent in ale, and the courtship is ever afterwards duly recognized. Should he be discovered again with a fresh companion, the claim is renewed. 'Pitcherings, owd lad! pitcherings!' is the polite mode of putting it.

Sc. Mackay. Sh.I. If thou'rt of air, let the gray mist fold thee. . . . If a Pixie, seek thy ring, Scott Pirate (1821) xxiii; S. & Ork.[1] s.Cy. [A woman] dressed herself in her husband's clothes . . . and went to the barn to do her husband's work. On the morning of the second day, when she went to the barn, she found a large pile of corn threshed which she had not done; and so she found for three or four days her pile of corn doubled. One night she determined to watch and . . . saw a little pixey come into the barn with a tiny flail, with which he set to work so vigorously that he soon threshed a large quantity. During his work he sang, 'Little pixey fair and slim, Without a rag to cover him.' The next day the good woman made a complete suit of miniature clothes. . . At the usual time the pixey came to work, . . saw the suit of clothes, took them down and put them on him, and surveyed himself with a satisfied air, and sang, 'Pixey fine and pixie gay, Pixey now must fly away.' It then flew away and she never saw it more, N. & Q. (1850) 1st S. ii. 514. Sur. He saw two little 'Piskies' working away with their fairie flails, Henderson Flk-Lore (1879) vii. Wil.[1] Said to be in use about Malmesbury. w.Dor. Roberts *Hist. Rusty horse-shoes are nailed over stable-doors to prevent the pixies from 'terrifyin'' the horses. Som., Dev. The Piscy or Pixy of East Devon and Somersetshire is a very different creature from his cousin of a similar name in Cornwall. The former is a mischievous, but in all respects a very harmless creation, who appears to live a rollicking life amidst the luxurious scenes of those beautiful counties, Hunt Pop. Rom. w.Eng. (1865) 80, ed. 1896. Dev. An old fisherwoman . . . told us that they were men, women, and children like ourselves, only they always dressed in green, lived underground, and were 'very small folk,' Monthly Pkt. (Oct. 1864) 447; The pixies are certainly a distinct race from the fairies; since, to this hour, the elders amongst the more knowing peasantry of Devon will invariably tell you . . . that these native spirits are the souls of infants, who were so unhappy as to die before they had received the Christian rite of baptism, Bray Desc. Tamar and the Tavy (1836) I. lett. 10; All owing to them beggaring little pigsies, Tozer Poems (1873) 76; Dev.[1] It is commonly believed to be one of the chief delights of these mischievous sprites to pinch 'black and blue' those who thwart their revels or otherwise interfere with their proceedings; Dev.[2] n.Dev. Fath! tell me o' tha Rexbush, ye teeheeing pixy, Exm. Scold. (1746) l. 130. nw.Dev.[1] Cor. A piskey . . . which frequently made its appearance in the form of a small child in the kitchen of the farm-house where the inmates were accustomed to set a little stool for it. It would do a good deal of household work. . . One evening it was sitting on the stool as usual when it suddenly started, looked up and said, 'Piskey fine and Piskey gay, Now, Piskey! run away,' and vanished; after which it never appeared again, N. & Q. (1850) 1st S. ii. 475; It is believed that wherever the pixies are fond of resorting, the depths of the earth are rich in metal. Very many mines have been discovered by their singing, ib. 515; There are five varieties of the fairy people, clearly distinguishable—1. The Small People. 2. The Spriggans. 3. Piskies, or Pigseys. 4. The Buccas. . . 5. The Browneys. . . The Piskie . . . is a most mischievous and very unsociable sprite. His favourite fun is to entice people into the bogs by appearing like the light from a cottage window, or as a man carrying a lantern. . . No Pigsey could harm a man if his coat were inside-out, and . . . persons who had to go from village to village by night . . . [wore] their jacket or coat so turned . . . to render them safe, Hunt Pop. Rom. w.Eng. (1865) 81-82, ed. 1896; Cor.[1] See-saw, Margery Daw, sold her bed and lay upon straw. Grose (1790). Sus.[1] [(2) A pies upon you, Cowley Cutter of Coleman Street (1663) (Nares). (4) Why what a-pies iz she made of? Unnatural Mother (1698) (ib.); What the pize ails them? Whiter Specimen (1794) 19 (Hall.).]

PIZE, v. and sb.[2] Yks. Der. Also written pise w.Yks. [paiz.] 1. v. To strike, knock; with down: to shoot.

w.Yks.[2] Pize him o'er. Der.[1] To pize down a hare.

2. To throw or serve a ball to be struck by another in the game of 'pize-ball'; to strike the ball with the hand.

w.Yks. Throo thrawin stones, tipsey lakein, an pizein a balls it publick streets, good Barnsla deliver uz, Tom Treddlehoyle Bairnsla Ann. (1869) 55; I'll pize and you look out (H.L.); w.Yks.[5] To throw a ball gently for another to bat with the open hand... The 'pizer' 'pizes' the ball to a number in succession... If all happen to be 'pized out,' the 'homey' is 'burnt.'

Hence Pizer, sb. the 'server' in the game of 'pize-ball,' the one who throws the ball to be struck by another. w.Yks.[5] 3. Comp. (1) Pize-back, a game similar to rounders; (2) -ball, (a) see (1); (b) the ball used in such a game.

(1) w.Yks. (J.W.) (2, a) w.Yks. (S.P.U.); (H.L.); w.Yks.[2] Sides are picked, as for example six on one side and six on the other, and three or four marks or 'tuts' are fixed in a field. Six go out to field, as in cricket, and one of these throws the ball to one of those who remain 'at home' and the one 'at home' strikes or pizes it with his hand. After pizing it he runs to one of the 'tuts,' but if before he can get to the 'tut' he is struck with the ball by one of those in the field, he is said to be 'burnt' or out. In that case the other side go out to field; w.Yks.[5] The game of 'Pize-ball,' in which the 'pizer' 'pizes' the ball to a number in succession, who run to different places called 'hobs,' where they remain till they have a chance of escape. If one of them is hit with the ball while running, he or she becomes the 'pizer.' If all happen to be 'pized out,' the 'homey' is 'burnt,' i.e., the ball is thrown straight to the ground, and the last in the 'ring' has to go back, pick it up, and become the 'pizer.' Der.[1] (b) w.Yks. A hollow, india-rubber ball (S.K.C.); w.Yks.[3] A ball which children play with, formerly stuffed with sawdust, &c., and used on 'Yester Monday, Fastens, and so on.' It was often parti-coloured and ornamented; now it is sometimes of india-rubber, and hollow. The idea seems to be a ball for tossing.

4. sb. A blow. w.Yks.[2] 5. A throw or serve in the game of 'pize-ball.'

w.Yks. Let me hev a pize, an' ah'll mak' him send a cop, Leeds Merc. Suppl. (Mar. 7, 1897).

PIZE, PIZEN, see Pease, Pizy, Paise, v.[1]

PIZINGS, sb. pl. w.Yks.[3] [pai'zinz.] A term in a game of marbles. See Hundred, 6.

The one who first gets the hundred (or other number) now goes in for his 'pizings,' which performance takes place thus: The loser, so far, is lying about and the winner goes back to 'drakes' and again tries to lodge in the hole, and if he succeeds the game is up. If not he lies still and the loser tries for the hole; if he gets in he counts another ten, or if he should succeed in hitting the winner, he scores his adversaries' hundred to his own number and then goes in for his pizings, as the other had done. In failure of either securing the game thus, the process is repeated at drakes. When, however, the one who is on for his pizings manages to taw into the hole the game is concluded (s.v. Hundreds).

PIZY, adj. Yks. Shr. w.Cy. Also in form pize Shr.[2] w.Cy. [pai'zi.] Peevish, irritable.

They had the wild man and the jester, combined in one character, who with his conical cap, and in a dress entirely covered with shreds of various coloured cloth, seemed to be the chief 'persona dramatis.' Another character designated 'Sweet Sis' was undertaken by one of the more juvenile of the company, and a third, named 'Old Joan,' both habited in female costume, . . were the most conspicuous of the performers. The others, some half-dozen youths, having their rustic attire covered with bunches of gaudy-coloured ribbons, being merely supernumeraries. . . The former of the two lady characters, by her fastidiousness, lost her lover (he in shreds with the conical cap), whom the coarse homeliness of 'old Joan' won. The amount collected by these plough-bullocks was often considerable, and was expended in giving a treat to their friends, male and female. n.Lin.[1] The next day the plough-bullocks, or boggins, go round the town to receive alms at each house, where they cry 'Largus.' They are habited similar to the morris-dancers, are yoked to, and drag a small plough; they have their farmer, and a fool called Billy Buck, dressed like a harlequin, with whom the boys make sport. The day is concluded by the bullocks running with the plough round the cross in the market-place, and the man that can throw the others down and convey their plough into the cellar of a public house receives one shilling for his agility, PECK Acc. Isle Axholme (1815) 278. Lei.[1] On Plough-Monday it was the custom for some of the villagers to dress in grotesque masquerade and perform morris-dances before all the houses where they were likely to get money or drink. Sometimes they were accompanied by a gang of lads with raddled faces, half-hidden under paper masks, who dragged a plough, but this was unusual. Some of the performers, generally four, had on white women's dresses and tall hats. One of these was called Maid Marian. Of the other performers, one was the Fool, who always carried the money-box, and generally a bladder with peas in it on a string at the end of a stick, with which he laid lustily about him. Another was Beelzebub, in a dress made up of narrow strips of flannel, cloth, &c., with the ends hanging loose. . . The rest were simply grotesques. The dance they performed was merely a travesty of a quadrille with ad lib. stamping and shuffling of feet. Their arms and shoulders are decorated with gay-coloured ribbons tied in large knots and bows, and their hats are smartened in the same way. They are usually accompanied by an old woman, or a boy dressed up to represent one. She is gaily bedizened and called the Bessy. Sometimes the sport is assisted by a humourous countryman to represent a fool. The great event of the day was when they came before some house which bore signs that the owner was well-to-do in the world and nothing was given them. . . The word was given, the ploughshare driven into the ground before the door or window, . . and in a minute or two the ground before the house was as brown, barren, and ridgy as a newly-ploughed field, Chambers Bk. of Days (1869) 94, 95; A custom in this neighbourhood [Wigtoft] of the ploughmen parading on Plow-Monday, Nichols *Illus. In the northern and eastern parts of the county it is more noticed than in the neighbourhood of Northampton. The pageant varies in different places, sometimes five persons precede the plough, which is drawn by a number of boys with their faces blackened and reddled. Formerly . . . the plough was drawn by oxen decorated with ribbons. The one who walks first in the procession is styled the Master, and is grotesquely attired, having on a large wig; two are gaily bedizened in women's clothes; and two others have large hunches on their backs, on which are sewed the knave of hearts; these two are called Red Jacks, or Fools. Each of the five carries a besom, and one of them a box, which he rattles assiduously among the spectators, to obtain their donations, which are spent at night in conviviality and jollification. In some instances they plough up the soil in front of the houses of such persons as refuse their contributions. Before the inclosure of open fields, there was another custom in connection with this day. When the ploughman returned from his labours in the evening, the servant maid used to meet him with a jug of toast and ale; and if he could succeed in throwing his plough hatchet into the house before she reached the door, he was entitled to a cock to throw at the next Shrove-tide, but if she was able to present him with the toast and ale first, then she gained the cock. The wheels can be easily raised or depressed; the shelboard thrown over at the end of each bout; and the skim-coulter reversed; while the double cutters pulverize the soil as it is passed on to them from the shelboards, so that no scuffling would be needed upon light soils. At the end of each bout the plough is turned, and a new furrow cut close to the last. It would seem to be an implement likely to effect a great saving of time and labour to men and horses (H.K.). Now they're married, I wish them joy, Every year a girl or boy, I hope this couple may kiss each other.' One child is chosen to act the part of the widow. The players join hands and form a circle. The widow takes her stand in the centre of the circle in a posture indicating sorrow. The girls in the circle trip round and round, and sing the first five lines. The widow then chooses one of the ring. The ring then sings the marriage formula, the two kiss each other, and the game is continued, the one chosen to be the mate of the first widow becoming the widow in turn, GOMME Games (1898) II. 63. Kcb. ib. 451–2. Ant. I. The parochial authorities are accompanied by other inhabitants, and a number of boys, to whom it is customary to distribute buns, &c. in order to impress it upon the memory, should the boundaries at any future period be disputed.

POSSET, sb. and v.[1] Sc. Nhb. Cum. Wm. Yks. Lan. Chs. Der. Not. War. Glo. Oxf. Brks. Nrf. Suf. Dev. Also written posit w.Yks.[3]; possett Lakel.[2] Lan.; possit w.Yks.[3] Lan. Chs.[1]; possut Brks.[1] [po·sit.] 1. sb. A warm drink, gen. consisting of milk and bread seasoned with ale or treacle, &c.

Ayr. Tea . . . did no harm, . . which was not the case with the possets that were in fashion before, GALT Ann. Parish (1821) iii. Nhb. An there was posset—an honey an bacon collops, BEWICK Tyneside Tales (1850) 13; Nhb.[1] Lakel.[2] Boilt milk wi' yal in't; good fer mowers. Cum., Wm. A dish of milk boiled with small squares of white bread and mixed with ale, sweetened and seasoned, was a common supper for strangers, when home-produce was almost exclusively used (M.P.); Wm. & Cum.[1] Before the introduction of tea, it was customary to give strangers at festival times ale-possets; they were served up in bowls called dubblers. w.Yks. A treacle posset has no meal or flour of any kind, simply milk and treacle, cracked by the addition of a little vinegar, thus forming curd, Leeds Merc. Suppl. (May 2, 1896); Milk boiled and broken into curds (D.L.). Lan. The possett they had imbibed, BRIERLEY Layrock (1864) xvi; One of their receipts for a common cold is 'a whot churn-milk posset, weel sweet'nt, an' a traycle cake to't, at bedtime,' WAUGH Sketches (1855) 22; Lan.[1] Der. A Kirsmas posset i' harvest time. .. Gin i' el, an' rum, an' whiskey, an' nutmegs, an' cloves, an' ginger. I wunna hev milk—a gill o' cream wi' lump sugar's the best. An' a raand o' toast to soften et, GILCHRIST Peakland Faggot (1897) 93. nw.Der.[1], War. (J.R.W.), Glo.[1] Brks.[1] 'Tracle-possut' and 'Inon-possut' are considered excellent remedies for a cold. Hence (1) Posset-cup, sb. a cup of silver or pewter used for drinking 'possets'; (2) -funeral, sb., obs., a funeral at which by the custom of the family the chief dish of the refreshment was 'posset'; (3) -masking, sb. the making and drinking of 'possets'; (4) -pot, sb. the pot or vessel in which 'posset' is made.

(1) N.Cy.[1] Wm. & Cum.[1] The posset-cup shone as an article of finery in the better sort of houses; it was made of pewter, and was furnished with two, three, or more lateral pipes through which the liquid part of the compound might be sucked by those who did not choose the bread. (2) Cum., Wm. Distinguished from the custom of other families, which had meat-funerals, or a general sort of entertainment for the whole of a village, when the bell went round to intimate that 'two were bidden from each house'; the formula when it was in words, and not a general invitation, as not being for a householder, &c. I saw, perhaps, one of the latest instances in this village [Langwathby], as a child. Long tables were laid out in the barn for those not related; they were covered with beautiful linen, and bowls at convenient intervals filled with genuine posset. From opposite sides, people, about four, reached out, dipped their spoons, and sipped the posset (M.P.). (3) Ayr. Decent ladies coming home with red faces, tosy and cosh, from a posset-masking, GALT Ann. Parish (1821) iii. (4) Lan. Yo mitn o' let'n th' possit pot bothom o' bin fund ere yo'dn kiket it oer, PAUL BOBBIN Sequel (1819) 41.

2. Phr. eating the posset, a wedding custom; see below.

Nhb.[1] In to the [bridal] chamber was brought a bowl containing a portion of broken white bread soaked in white milk instead of wine, into which the marriage ring was dropped; the bride and bridegroom tasted the contents first, then the bowl was assailed by the lasses and lads; and whoever 'fished' up the ring was accounted to have the best chance of being first married, RICHARDSON Borderer's Table-bk. (1842) 344.

3. The flower of the meadow-sweet, Spiraea Ulmaria.

Lan. That tall, white flower, which country folk call 'posset,' spread out its curdy top among the elegant summer grasses, WAUGH Sketches (1855) 163; Lan.[1]

4. The liquid food vomited by babies.

w.Yks. Sutha, wipe me this 'posit off o' mi arm, Leeds Merc. Suppl. (Apr. 18, 1896). e.Lan.[1]

5. v. Of a baby: to vomit, to throw up small quantities of food.

Lakel.[2], Cum.[4], Wm. (J.M.) w.Yks. Bless its little heart, it's possetting again (H.L.); w.Yks.[23], e.Lan.[1], Chs.[1], s.Chs.[1], s.Not. (J.P.K.)

Hence Posseting, ppl. adj. of babies: given to vomiting.

s.Not. Posseting babies always come on (J.P.K.).

POSSET, v.[2] Yks. Lan. Chs. Also written poset w.Yks.[2] [po·sit, w.Yks. pəze·t.] To dance; in dancing: to change positions for the next figure.

5. A mining term: a tool used in charging a hole for blasting.

Nhb.[1] A thin pointed rod made of yellow metal, and used for placing and adjusting a blasting cartridge, which it perforates and remains embedded in till the stemming has been tamped round it. When withdrawn, it leaves a touch hole through which the cartridge is fired. A 'stemmer,' also of yellow metal, is a complementary tool which accompanies a pricker. Hence 'pricker and stemmer' are usually spoken of together. Nhb., Dur. About ¼-inch diameter at the thick end, which is turned into a ring, and tapered to a point at the other. It is about 3 feet long, and is used for putting the shot into a hole and keeping a port-hole open to the powder during the process of stemming, remaining in the hole during the operation, NICHOLSON Coal Tr. Gl. (1888). w.Yks.[1] A needle introduced into the hole previously bored in a rock, for the purpose of making a vacancy, to communicate fire to the powder, for a blast. Chs.[1] Salt-mining term. Der. The blast-hole having received its proper charge of gun-powder, a cylindrical iron rod, called a Pricker, is then introduced, round which the miner runs small fragments of stone as firmly as possible, to the very mouth of the hole; the Pricker is then withdrawn, and a straw filled with gun-powder is placed in the hole in its stead, which communicates with the powder in the chamber, and on being ignited, explodes the whole charge, MANDER Miner's Gl. (1824) 54; ENGLISH Mining Terms (1830) 68.

6. An iron rod used for following the burrow of a rabbit when ferreting. Cum.[4] 7. A thorn.

PROCESSIONING, vbl. sb. Stf. War. Shr. Glo. Lon. Som. Also in form processing Som. [prəse·ʃənin.] The practice of perambulating the boundaries of the parish in Rogation Week; the practice of beating the parish bounds. Cf. possessioning.

Stf. Among the local customs which have prevailed here may be noticed that which was popularly called 'Processioning.' Many of the older inhabitants can well remember when the sacrist, resident prebendaries, and members of the choir, assembled at morning prayers on Monday and Tuesday in Rogation Week, with the charity children, bearing long poles clothed with all kinds of flowers then in season, and which were afterwards carried through the streets of the town with much solemnity, the clergy, singing men and boys, dressed in their sacred vestments, closing the procession, and chanting in grave and appropriate melody, the Canticle, Benedicite, Omnia Opera, &c., SHAW Hist. Stf. II. i. 165, in BRAND Pop. Antiq. (1813) I. 169. War.[3] Glo. The practice is still followed in Todenham. In this parish the parties start in different directions, having appointed meeting places in the perambulation, and on meeting whip each other, whether on horseback or on foot, with withies from which the bark has been freshly stripped, this making it difficult to hold the sticks firmly (E.S.). Lon. The children in London are accustomed to perambulate the limits of their parish, which they call processioning, ARMSTRONG Minorca (1752) 5, in BRAND ib. 178. Som. (W.F.R.)

Hence Processioning-day, sb. the Wednesday in Rogation Week.

Shr. On this 'Processioning Day,' as it was called, the boys of the various schools, accompanied by a clergyman, perambulated the boundaries of the town. Starting from the church, they . . . returned up the river side to Ludford Bridge, in the centre of which a decorated birch bough had been fixed to the wall in readiness for their coming. Every boy carried in his hand a birch bough closely tied up, and with these . . . a tremendous fight for the possession of the bough upon the bridge took place between the different schools. This ended, the party marched to the Guildhall, to finish their work by a feast of plum buns, BURNE Flk-Lore (1883-6) 347-8.

There is a game called 'pyings off.' First, a hole is made in the usual manner by one spinning round upon his heel, and then 'dashing' the loose earth away with his cap, which done, each knuckles his 'taw' from a chalked line called the 'ledge,' and the one who is farthest off the hole 'ligs' or lays his 'taw' just beyond the hole. Each then in his turn 'pyes his taw' from the 'ledge,' hits (if he can) and 'gets his hoil,' which, however, if he fails in doing, the 'ligger' takes aim at him from the hole, and if with effect 'cowdens' or coldens him, and getting his 'hoil' joins the party of 'pyers off,' till the 'game' is up (supposing it is 'a lāak fur nowt'), if he is fortunate enough to 'keep in' the while.

QUAG, sb. and v. In gen. dial. use in Sc. and Eng. Also in form quog Not.[1] Lei.[1] [kwag, kwæg, kwog.]

1. sb. A quagmire; soft, muddy ground; a wet sod; also used fig.

Per. Adieu to those who would beguile Our feet the quag to sink upon, SPENCE Poems (1898) 81. Ayr. The progress of the cart through the ruts and quags of the moss, JOHNSTON Congalton's Legacy (1896) 172. Gall. The stormy desolation of verbs irregular and the quags of the rules of syntax, CROCKETT Standard Bearer (1898) 61. Nhb. Like enough I wad be flung intae the first quag or peat-bog we cam' tae, JONES Nhb. (1871) 155. n.Yks.[2], ne.Lan.[1], Lin.[1], Nhp.[1], War.[3], Glo.[1], Suf.[1], Hmp. (J.R.W.), Hmp.[1], n.Wil. (E.H.G.) Dor.[1] Rolled down into huome-groun' quag, 180. w.Som.[1] Applied to a particular kind of bog. It is solid-looking on the surface, and the turf is often so tough that it can be walked on, but it shakes and bends beneath the tread. If a quag be broken through by a horse's foot, he always sinks up to the belly. It is common for sportsmen to fire a shot at a very short distance down into a quag; this breaks a hole through and the water boils out. A quag is seldom more than a few yards square, and when of the green grassy kind, is usually very convex, and the most tempting-looking spot for an unwary horseman. Cor. There's a quag on t'other side o' the Castle here, 'Q.' Three Ships (ed. 1892) 156.

Hence Quaggy, adj. of the soil: boggy, soft and tremulous; used also of fat, flabby flesh.

Ballads* (1806) II. 363. ne.Sc. When the quarter-ill made its appearance the muckle wheel was set in motion and turned till fire was produced. From this virgin flame fires were kindled in the byres. At the same time, if neighbours requested the favour, live coals were given them to kindle fires for the purification of their homesteads and turning off the disease. Fumigating the byres with juniper was a method adopted to ward off disease. Such a fire was called 'needfyre,' GREGOR Flk-Lore (1881) 186. Abd. We talked gravely of the valuable stirk that had taken the quarter ill, ALEXANDER Ain Flk. (1882) 56. Ags. A very gross superstition is observed as an antidote against this ill. A piece is cut out of the thigh of one of the cattle that has died of it. This they hang up within the chimney, in order to preserve the rest of the cattle from being infected. It is believed that as long as it hangs there, it will prevent the disease from approaching the place. It is therefore carefully preserved, and in case of the family removing, transported to the new farm. . . It is handed down from one generation to another (JAM.). Nhb. The quarter-ill, from which a loss of 15% [of lambs] is estimated, MARSHALL Review (1818) I. 101. Nhb.[1] It is generally fatal. At the birth of a calf, salt is sprinkled on its back, and an egg—shell and all—thrust down its throat. Sometimes a sort of invocation or incantation is mumbled over a newly-calved calf, the last few words being: 'And may thoo ken nee mair o' the quarter-ill nor aa ken whether thoo's a bull or a quey.' n.Yks. A complaint to which one-year old calves are liable, TUKE Agric. (1800) 259. w.Som.[1] (5) w.Yks. BANKS *Wkfld. The next degree of aberration [to the eccentric] constitutes a 'quarter clift,' Chambers's Jrn. (1856) V. 139. Ant. (S.A.B.) (4) Der. Quarter cord is the measure of seven yards and a quarter, which the miner by custom has crossways of his vein on either side for liberty to lay his earth, stone, or rubbish on, and to wash and dress up his ore. So long as a mine is wrought and in possession, everything upon the quarter cord belongs to the miner, Tapping Gl. to Manlove (1851); The quarter cord is one fourth of a meer of ground . . . and is the measure of that quantity of land in any freehold upon which the miner claims to have a right to erect coes and hovels, undress and lay his clothes, dress and lay his ore till measured, and to lay such mineral tools and materials as might easily be stolen and carried away, and also to lay all such rubbish, ore, &c., as he has occasion to draw out of his vein, and to set buddle fats, &c. . . It must be observed that as the miner has no customary right to go beyond his quarter cord, so within it he has no right to make use of more compass of land than is reasonable and necessary, . . all the other parts of the land within the limits of the quarter cord belonging to the occupier of the land, Mander Miner's Gl. (1824). (5) I.Ma. Two principal divisions of land exist. . . Treens . . . usually contain from three to four quarterlands, though some have but two, and others even less. . . Quarterlands, which are estates of inheritance, vary in size, and contain from 120 to 140 acres, N. & Q. (1865) 3rd S. viii. 310. (6) Ess.[1] Potatoes are sold by the quarter-peck instead of by the pound. (7) Chs.[1]

14. v. To divide the country up in making careful search.

QUEEN, sb.[1] Var. dial. uses in Sc. Irel. and Eng. [kwīn.] 1. In comb. (1) Queen Anne, (a) a game; see below; (b) a coloured butterfly; (c) an old-fashioned gun; (2) — Anner, an old-fashioned tale; a tale of former times; (3) — Bess, the queen of clubs; (4) — chair, (5) -'s cushion, a method of carrying a person; see below; (6) -'s head, a postage-stamp; (7) -'s man, a soldier; (8) — Mary, a game; see below; (9) — of hearts, obs., a country dance; (10) — of Sheba, a game; see below; (11) -'s play, a temporary truce in a boys' game; (12) -'s posset, see below; (13) -'s stick, a stately person.

(1, a) Sc. This is a game in which a ball is used. The following rhyme accompanies it: 'Lady Queen Ann she sits in her stand, And a pair of green gloves upon her hand, As white as a lily, as fair as a swan, The fairest lady in a' the land; Come smell my lily, come smell my rose, Which of my maidens do you choose? I choose you one, and I choose you all, And I pray, Miss [Jane], yield up the ball. The ball is mine, and none of yours, Go to the wood and gather flowers. Cats and kittlins bide within, But we young ladies walk out and in,' CHAMBERS Pop. Rhymes (ed. 1870) 136. Ant. GOMME Games (1898) II. 92. I.Ma. ib. 453. n.Lin. There is only one player on Queen Anne's side, the rest form the line, ib. 95. Lon., Nrf. ib. 93. Ess. ib. 95. Sur., Sus. ib. 94. Dor. Flk-Lore Jrn. VII. 229, in GOMME ib. 91. Dev. GOMME ib. 94. Cor. Flk-Lore Jrn. V. 52–3, in GOMME ib. 92. [Sides are chosen, and two lines are formed; the words are said by each line alternately. One line, in which is the Queen, standing still or sitting down, the other line advancing and retiring while singing the words. The latter line gives one of their number a ball or some other small object to hold in the hand in such a manner that it cannot be perceived. All the players on this side then assume the same position—either all put their hands behind them, or fold their arms, put their hands under their armpits, or under their skirts or pinafores. The object of the other side is to guess which child in the line has the ball. The line which has the ball commences the game by advancing singing or saying the first three or four lines. Queen Anne answers, and then names one of the girls on the opposite side whom she suspects to have the ball, and if she be right in her guess the lines change sides. If she be wrong, the line retires in triumph, the girl who possesses the ball holding it up to show the Queen she is wrong. The children all curtsey when leaving the Queen's presence. Another girl of the line then takes the ball, and the game continues till the right holder of the ball is named. When the Queen tells the line of players to 'turn,' they all spin round, coming back to face the Queen, and then stand still again, GOMME ib. 95. For further particulars and rhymes see GOMME ib. 90–102.] (b) Chs.[1] (c) Sc. A long barrel, big bore, in comparison with modern guns, flintlock. (7) Dor. They recalled him as he was in the days before he had become a Queen's man, Windsor Mag. (Aug. 1900) 359. (8) Sc. Played by girls. The players join hands, form a circle with one in the centre, and dance round singing. At the words ''ill tack me awa,' the centre player chooses another one, and the two wheel round. Then the singing proceeds. At the exclamation 'ha! ha!' the players suit the action to the words of the line, GOMME ib. 104. ne.Sc. My name is Queen Mary, My age is sixteen, My father's a farmer in Old Aberdeen; He has plenty of money to dress me in black—There's nae bonnie laddie 'ill tack me awa'. Next mornin' I wakened and looked in the glass, I said to myself, what a handsome young lass; Put your hands to your haunches and give a ha, ha, For there's nae bonnie laddie will tack ye awa', ib. 103. Bnff. In the Cullen game the girls stand in a row with one in front, who sings the verses and chooses another player from the line. The two then join hands and go round and round singing the remaining verses, ib. 104. Bwk. Antiquary, XXX. 17, in GOMME ib. 103. Nhb. GOMME ib. 102–3. (10) Not., Lin. Two rows of people sit on chairs face to face on each side of a door, leaving just sufficient space between the lines for a player to pass. At the end of the rows furthest from the door sits the 'Queen of Sheba,' with a veil or shawl over her head. A player, hitherto unacquainted with the game, is brought to the door, shown the Queen, and told to go up between the rows, after being blindfolded, to kiss her, taking care, meanwhile to avoid treading on the toes of the people on each side the alley leading to the lady. While his mind is diverted by these instructions, and by the process of blindfolding, the Queen gives up her seat to 'the King,' who has been lurking in the background. He assumes the veil and receives the kiss, to the amusement of every one but the uninitiated player, GOMME ib. 104. (11) Nhb.[1] (12) Lan. [On Whit-Tuesday a queen was chosen at Downham]. On the next night all the young persons met at the inn, on invitation from the king and queen. Each paid a shilling towards the 'Queen's Posset.' A large posset was then made and handed round to the company. After this the evening was spent in dancing and merry-making, HARLAND & WILKINSON Flk-Lore (1867) 248. (13) Lin. (HALL.)

Sc. The music for a hungry wame Is grinding o' the quernie, JAMIESON Pop. Ballads (1806) II. 355. Sh.I. There is, however, another sort of grinding apparatus . . . that is well known under the name of Quern. A hand-mill of this kind consists of two stones, about 21 inches in diameter, that rest on a kind of table. Near the edge of the upper stone is a handle which the grinder (generally a female of the house) seizes and turns round with a sort of centrifugal movement, whilst the left hand is employed in supplying with corn a hole in the centre. The meal then flies outward, and drops from between the stones on the table, when it is every now and then scraped together and taken away, HIBBERT Desc. Sh. I. (1822) 205, ed. 1891. Or.I. N.Cy.[2] A furrow. Chs. A strip of land (originally a furlong in length, i. e. the length of a standard furrow) marked off from similar strips lying in the same field by mere-stones or a narrow strip of unploughed land. It was usually employed in dividing up a tract of reclaimed or enclosed land among the freeholders of a manor—each freeholder getting one or more strips. . . Land . . . lying to the east of Great Meols station-bridge . . . is still called 'quilletts,' Nature Notes (Nov. 1894) V. 217; A long narrow strip of land, of which there may be many in one large field, and the width of one, or at most two furrows. Such land has usually at some remote time been common land, apportioned out to individual cottagers of the adjoining township or village, Sheaf (1880) II. 109; Chs.[1] A small plot of land lying within the property of another proprietor, and not separated therefrom by any fence. Of course the owner of the quillet has a right of road to his property. There is a piece of land called 'The Quillet' which formerly belonged to the Marquis of Cholmondeley, but was surrounded by other land belonging to Sir Richard Brooke. 'Lot 6. Nine pieces of land, being Quillets in Big Maes Ewlin'; Chs.[3] n.Wal. Very small, and seldom exceed half or three quarters of an acre in extent. . . They are situated in fields . . . but are not the property of the owners of those fields. . . Rent for them is usually paid by the owners of the fields. Their owners can fence them round, N. & Q. (1884) 6th S. x. 228. Agl. Arising from the tenure of gavelkind formerly in force there, N. & Q. (1873) 4th S. xii. 348. s.Wor.
